“Miss Indy was more than a friend to me, she was my momma bear. It's been three almost four years since last I saw her but we always stayed tried in touch when we could. I was going to try and visit after graduation next year... in celebration of the things she inspired me to achieve. You see, there is no one singular special memory that stands out to me with her. It has always been a compilation of memories that I've missed her through. She loved as fiercely as she protected, a true momma bear. Worked hard for herself and even harder for her loved ones. When I met her she spotted right away something was seriously wrong in my life... and she never judged me for it. Every day I worked with her was a blessing, she always cared how I was feeling and always tried to make me feel better if low. Though she couldn't do anything about my situation, I know she would've, she never failed to make me feel loved, safe, and cared about... which was so rare in all those dark years. And if ever I was slipping in her own funny sarcastic way she'd get my butt back in line, kicking off that's what's I needed. She was a port in my storm. If it weren't for Miss Indy and the gang... I'd probably still be in my living hell unaware how really capable I am to get out of it. She made me realize I was worth something, worth fighting for, a joy to be around- and strong. And with that little seed... that little prayer of hers... I broke free from my chains, moved back in with my long lost family and son- and started building my life anew from the ground up. That little seed growing in the center of my new garden. And since then it always meant the world to touch base with her, always telling me how proud she was of me... Thats the simplest way I can put it... what she was to me, and I though know it's only a rain drop in the ocean that she was for her family. I know I will miss her so very dearly... but I also feel like she wouldn't want sadness for her departure, instead as if she is now a star in the heavens continuing to guide everyone she has loved in her life, alongside those who have been patiently waiting. Missing her just as much. Thank you Miss Indy... For being you. Love... doesn't quite describe it all, but then again you didn't ever really need words for feelings, like a true momma bear. ~Richelle L. Cowan
