“ Mom,

I still miss you every single day & think about you non-stop. Our relationship was never the "norm" and these last few years more bad than good.

That day, the day you were really gone, that day that i heard my daughter say, "Grandmas gone. She's gone Mom, she's really gone Mom;" that day absolutely broke me; it brought out a person I still don't know now. I'm still angry -i really feel more so than when it first happened; I feel empty Mom. I feel like I want to scream and that I'm angry because you left me and my kids, my granddaughters who loved you so SO much Mom; you had a purpose but you lived under this shadow of control and I'll never be ok for how everything was or happened because still, no matter what, you were my Mom. I will always and forever love the mother I remember having growing up. That mother has been gone longer than your passing though & for that reason, the grief I'm dealing with is so heavy each day. I would have supported you through anything- I just wanted you to see the light at the end of the road. Help me, somehow, in this life of mine so I can understand what happened and what should happen next Mom. I'm doing all this because it's the right thing to do & you deserve that at the very least. You passing on will never change that you are why I'm alive here today. That can't ever be taken away. I will always be grateful for my life no matter how bad things can get; without yours, mine wouldn't have ever existed.

Your daughter, Amber.

“ My Mom was a Great woman. Our relationship since I've been an adult has been rocky and we argued daily, however, that will never take away from her being my Mom. Death is life-changing. I want to call my Mom every day I wake up since she passed, but I'll never be able to again.
