“ My father was always my hero. I watched how he attacked life, I saw the passion and loyalty that he loved my mother, and he always let you know how he felt even when it wasn't what you wanted to hear. I saw him get a little softer when I brought my children around, he loved being a grandfather. I joined the Army and had a long career trying to be the leader and soldier he was. I now mourn my father and know the world will be a grayer place without him but I will hold on to all he taught me and try to honor his memory in all that I do.
